Heritage Center 2023 Preservations Awards

The Slate Belt Heritage Center, is accepting applications for its' 2023 Preservation Awards.

The purpose of these awards is to acknowledge individuals and businesses who have performed exemplary acts that promote and preserve the culture and heritage of the entire Slate Belt. Candidates may be an individual or group/business and can be nominated by themselves or by another party.

There are three (3) categories:

1. Initiative Award: Applicant who has performed exemplary actions in promoting and preserving the Slate Belt heritage through in-kind actions. This means acts that do not receive monetary donations, and can be an unpaid service for a preservation cause.
2. Architectural Award: Applicant who is saving or conserving a historic building, place or artifact where restoration is authentic to preservation. This can be either a private home or business.
3. Special Focus Award: Applicant who is saving or conserving tradition or a body of knowledge. That individual who contributes to educational information via exhibits, documentation, internet, archival, etc.

Interested parties may obtain an application at the Heritage Center (Sundays 12-3 PM) during our winter hours or by contacting Karen Brewer @ 484-894-5661, where an application can be mailed.

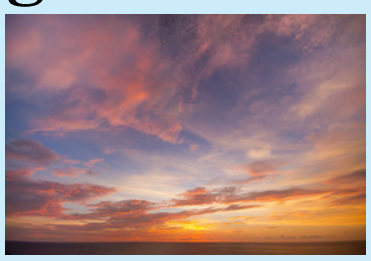
Today Is The Year's Least Daily Amount of Daylight



Today is the day with the least amount of sunlight during the year. With sunrise today at 7:22am and sunset at 4:36pm we will have nine hours, 19 minutes and two seconds of daylight, not including twilight.

Tomorrow, the amount of daylight will increase by two seconds. Friday's daylight will be 5 seconds more than Thursday and Saturday's daylight will be 10 seconds greater than Friday. That trend will continue with three minutes more daylight than today by January 1. By the end of January, the length of daylight will be 47 minutes greater than today. This progression will continue until June when the amount of daylight begins to steadily diminish until December 2023.

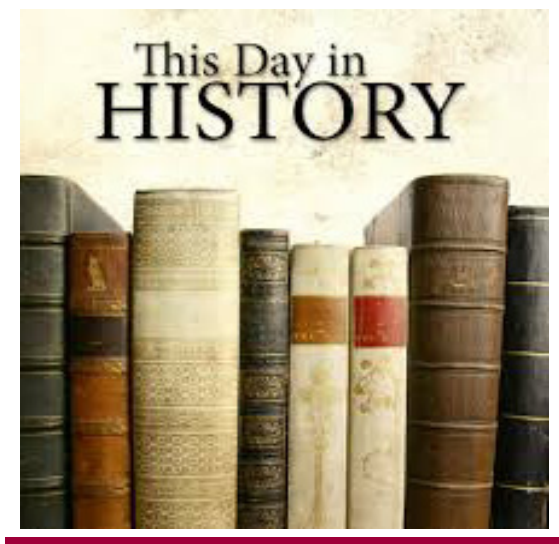
Pan Am Flight 103 Explodes Over Scotland

On December 21, 1988, Pan Am Flight 103 from London to New York explodes in midair over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing all 243 passengers and 16 crew members aboard, as well as 11 Lockerbie residents on the ground. A bomb hidden inside an audio cassette player detonated in the cargo area when the plane was at an altitude of 31,000 feet. The disaster, which became the subject of Britain's largest criminal investigation, was believed to be an attack against the United States. One hundred eighty nine of the victims were American.



Islamic terrorists were accused of planting the bomb on the plane while it was at the airport in Frankfurt, Germany. Authorities suspected the attack was in retaliation for either the 1986 U.S. air strikes against Libya, in which leader Muammar al-Qaddafi's young daughter was killed along with dozens of other people, or a 1988 incident, in which the U.S. mistakenly shot down an Iran Air commercial flight over the Persian Gulf, killing 290 people.

Scientists Create World's Strongest Material

It Opens The Door To Indestructible Cars, Planes And Buildings That Can Withstand Earthquakes.

By Mark Waghorn via SWNS

The world's strongest material has been created by scientists.

It's around 500 times harder than diamond - the most resistant naturally occurring element on Earth.

The metal alloy contains a cocktail of chromium, cobalt and nickel (CrCoNi).

It opens the door to indestructible cars and planes and buildings that can withstand earthquakes.

CrCoNi is highly malleable - and also resists permanent deformation. Remarkably its qualities improve as it gets colder - unlike alternatives.

CrCoNi belongs to a class known as HEAs (high entropy alloys) - made of an equal mix of each constituent element.

The atomic recipes bestow an extraordinarily high combination of strength and bendiness when stressed.

HEAs have been a hot area of research since they were first developed about 20 years ago. But the technology required to push the materials to their limits in extreme tests was not available until recently.

The team at California University in Berkeley created CrCoNi almost a decade ago but it took ten years to find facilities that could test it in such cold temperatures.

Many solid substances, including metals, exist in a crystalline form characterized by a repeating 3D atomic pattern, called a unit cell.

It makes up a larger structure called a lattice - where weaknesses occur. This is what causes a metal spoon to bend, for instance, when force is applied.

Scanning techniques showed CrCoNi's toughness is due to a trio of obstacles that come into effect in a particular order when force is applied to the material.

The sequence ensures the metal keeps flowing - but also keeps meeting new resistance from obstacles far past the point that most materials snap from the strain.

Ritchie said: "So as you are pulling it, the first mechanism starts and then the second one starts, and then the third one starts, and then the fourth.

"Now, a lot of people will say, well, we've seen nanotwinning in regular materials, we've seen slip in regular materials. That's true.

"There's nothing new about that, but it's the fact they all occur in this magical sequence that gives us these really tremendous properties."

The study in the journal Science may force the materials experts to reconsider long-held notions about how physical characteristics give rise to performance.

Ritchie said: "It's amusing because metallurgists say that the structure of a material defines its properties, but the structure is the simplest you can imagine – it's just grains."

George foresees uses in situations where environmental extremes could destroy standard metallic alloys, such as in in the frigid temperatures of deep space.

His team are also investigating how alloys made of more abundant and less expensive elements could be coaxed into having similar properties.

There is a global shortage of cobalt and nickel due to their demand in the battery industry.

Ritchie said real-world use is still a little way off as many safety trials will be required.

He said: "When you are flying on an airplane, would you like to know that what saves you from falling 40,000 feet is an airframe alloy that was only developed a few months ago?

"Or would you want the materials to be mature and well understood? That's why structural materials can take many years, even decades, to get into real use."
