Scheduled Game With Philadelphia Athletics Helped Fund Bangor's First Swimming Pool

by Larry Cory

It may be interesting to learn that the Philadelphia Athletics and the Kayser Silk Mill of Bangor played a role in building the first swimming pool in Bangor Borough.

The silk mill employed many people in the area producing, among others, parachutes for World War II and lady's undergarments. The MLB Athletics, managed by the renowned Connie Mack, was the first incarnation of the Oakland Athletics that still play today.

So how did these organizations contribute to the Bangor pool?

As interest in constructing a recreation center in Bangor in 1937 began to grow, James Underwood Superintendent of Kayser, headed the Bangor Recreation Association which was organized to help fund the rec center that would be built on 12 acres of land near Broadway and 10th Street (Eisenhart Blvd). The center would include an athletic field, a track, tennis courts, a swimming pool and an amphitheater. A house was actually moved to the north side of Market Street to accommodate full construction of the park.

Using Kayser's national and international reputation, Underwood was able to arrange a game between the Athletics and the Kayser A.A. to be played at Flory's Field on North Main Street June 13, 1937.

Just imagine for a moment that a major league baseball team would take time away from playing the likes of the New York Yankees and Lou Gehrig to journey to the Slate Belt play a benefit baseball game. Local fans loved the idea and reportedly bought over 2,000 tickets to see the game. Unfortunately, the game was rained out. The game was eventually rescheduled for later in the season, but that too, was washed out.

Underwood reportedly journeyed to Philadelphia and met with Connie Mack to arrange a game in 1938. On the scheduled date, however, Mack and the Athletics were a no-show. The much-ballyhooed big game apparently was never played, although some historical publications claim that it was

A meeting at the Colonial Hotel in Bangor was scheduled to host local baseball fans after the game between Kayser A.A. and the Athletics, and despite the rainout, the meeting went on as planned where speaker Chief Burgess (Mayor) Arthur Stoddard of Bangor outlined plans for the new swimming pool in Bangor and urged listeners to get behind the $35,000 ($702,000 in today's money) bond issue in the September primaries. That money would be used for the construction of the new Bangor Park swimming pool, subject to approval of a bond issue in the September 1937 primary election.

In December 1937, the Pennsylvania Department of Health approved the pool and borough officials were going forward with preparation to construct the bathing area as the first unit of the $150,000 project ($3.1 million in today's money)

Land for the pool was purchased for $2,500 by the Bangor Recreation Association. Additional land for the athletic field track, and tennis courts was purchased for $7,500 by Bangor borough council. Roadways to the park were made by extending Broadway and tenth street.

Council then contracted with Wesley Binz by NTZ of Lansing Michigan to supervise the construction of the pool estimated to cost $35,000 exclusive of labor. The Works Progress Administration (WPA) authorized $41,000 for this part of the part of the recreation center with the borough spending an additional $17,000.

The pool was ovoid (egg shaped) 80' x 120' and was estimated to accommodate over 2,500 bathers a day while the bathhouses would hold 800 bathers at one time.

The pool was filled May 4 and officially dedicated May 27, 1939.

Dedication day was marked by the appearance of the Lafayette College swim team, water clowns from the Easton YMCA, a diving demonstration by East Stroudsburg State Teachers College and more.

The pool was closed two weeks later for the ill-fated A's – Kayser A.A game.

The 1937 pool was eventually demolished in 1996 making way for the current pool which was built in 1997, just two years after the athletic field stadium was remodeled.
