Microplastics Spreading Through The Air We Breathe

by Tom Campbell via SWNS (talkernews.com)

Winds are spreading microplastics much faster than oceans, warns new research from an international team of scientists.

Tons of plastic pollution from cars and industry are being blown around the world and threatening delicate natural environments. Tiny plastic particles, known as microplastics, have now been detected in almost all natural environments, including the polar regions.

The pollutants are also being transported to all four corners of the earth through waterways, including rivers and ocean currents.

Now scientists have found that winds are also transporting plastic particles to vulnerable parts of our planet.

The discovery could also be relevant for human health as a recent British study found microplastics in the lungs of 11 out of 13 people.

Study co-author Dr. Melanie Bergmann at the Alfred Wegener Institute (AWI) in Germany, said: "Air is a much more dynamic medium than water.

"As a result, micro and nano plastic can much more quickly penetrate those regions of our planet that are most remote and still largely untouched."

The level of plastic pollution could reach 80 million metric tons per year by 2040 according to estimates.

An international team made up of 33 researchers took part in the study.

They found plastic pollution from human activities like road traffic or industrial processes were being transported by winds.

There is also evidence particles are passing from the ocean to the atmosphere through air bubbles in the water and sea spray.

When the bubbles burst, the pollutants find their way into the atmosphere and are transported to remote regions.

Between 0.013 and 25 million metric tons of micro and nano plastic are being transported by ocean air, snow, sea spray and fog every year, the researchers say.

Dr. Bergmann said: "We need to integrate micro and nano plastic in our measurements of air pollution, ideally on an international scale as part of global networks."

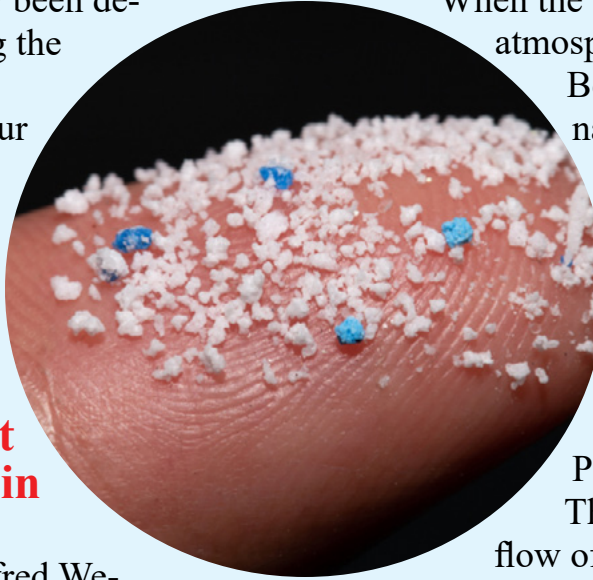

The researchers started collecting samples of microplastic from the air, seawater and ice during a Polarstern expedition to the Arctic last year.

They are looking to create a "seamless" database on the flow of micro and nano plastic between the ocean and atmosphere.

Co-author Professor Tim Butler, of the Advanced Sustainability Studies (IASS), also in Germany, said: "There are so many aspects of the emissions, transport and effects of microplastic in the atmosphere that we still don't fully understand.

"This publication reveals the gaps in our knowledge and presents a roadmap for the future."

Sharing information on the spread of plastics across the scientific community will help overcome these challenges.

The Pennsylvania Longrifle... and You!

Saturday, May 28 at 10:30am to 11:30am

In this seminar, guest speaker Dave Ehrig will explore the roots of our state's iconic new symbol. From humble frontier roots, an evolution of gunmaking technology took place, the rifled barrel. While Henry of Lancaster, along with other Lancaster gunsmiths like Matthias Roesser, George Fainot, Jacob Dickert, and others were among the first to exploit the legendary accuracy of long rifled barrels, the Henry family's fame would increase as the technology was brought to the Moravian Societies in Christian's Spring, Nazareth, and Boudon. To hold an early Andreas Albrecht, Christian Oerter, or Wm. Henry Jr. longrifle in one's hands is to create such an indelible memory of Pennsylvania history that it causes many skilled modern longrifle builders to attempt to recreate them. This program will raise your spirits and enlighten your pride in the Keystone State and its iconic gun. Registration is required.
