Mural As It Appeared September 11, 2001

Mural Turned Patriotic During 9-11 Attack

Artist/Muralist Terri Palmer Made Quick Change of Plans

by Larry Cory

September 11, 2001 for most of us old enough to remember will recall the date as a beautiful late summer day before a series of tragic events that Tuesday morning etched an indelible memory in our minds that we will never forget.

Many people recall what they were doing when they heard the news that terrorists had crashed planes into the World Trade Center's twin towers in New York City on a suicide mission to attack our country.

Bangor artist/muralist Terri Palmer and her friend Laura Shreiber were painting a mural on a fence at Renee's Café on the corner of Messenger Street and South Main Street in Bangor.

"We started the project the morning of 9-11. Renee had asked me to paint a mural with flowers, an upbeat lively look, very colorful," Palmer recalls. "While painting the mural, the Twin Towers were hit by the planes."

As the morning went on, news was spreading about the Pentagon attack and the Flight 93 crash in Pennsylvania.

"We continued our painting and started adding the flag and other patriotic items," Palmer said. "People drove by with encouraging words seeing what we were painting."

Although, Renee's was closed that day, owner Renee Williams was in the café.

"Lobb's Roofing was repairing (the) front porch of the café after a recent accident took a pole out," Williams said. "I was not paying attention until Robert Lobb got (a) phone call from his wife about (the) incident. He must have been the only one with (a) cell phone in those days. We gathered around a TV and watched as a second plane hit a building.... wow."

The timing of the attacks made Palmer's spontaneous patriotic touch possible. Palmer said that they had time to finish painting the flag that day, but the mural, as she recalls, may have been completed a short time later.

"Some where in the mix of things the cow gate on fence got an American flag makeover and some patriotic add-ons were worked into the mural," Williams said. "The fence was quite a beauty in its day."

Blood Donations Needed Statewide in PA

The Department of Health, along with leaders of five major blood banks across the state, are encouraging Pennsylvanians who are able to consider donating blood. Donations have decreased dramatically during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Donated blood is essential for surgeries, traumatic injuries, cancer treatment and chronic illnesses. In fact, approximately 36,000 units of red blood cells are needed every day in the United States.

The type of blood most commonly requested and used by hospitals is type O. Type O blood can be transfused to patients with any blood type, which is why it is often used in emergencies when there is not enough time to determine a patient's blood type. However, all blood types are needed to make sure there is a reliable supply for patients.

Most individuals are eligible to donate blood in Pennsylvania if they are in good health, at least 16 years old and weigh a minimum of 120 pounds.

To donate blood, make an appointment with a local blood bank or visit an upcoming blood drive in your community.

7:00 in the Council Chamber at the Center. Todd Kneebone, a former Bangor resident, recently returned from a trip to Wales and Cornwall, where he connected with his ancestors and the heritage of his hometown. What attracted settlers from Cornwall, in southern England, to the Slate Belt?

Was Bangor, Wales and the surrounding area really the slate capital of the world? And why is there such a thick rim of crust on Cornish pasties? Todd's presentation will answer these questions, and more, to help us connect with the past. Masks are required for everyone who attends the presentation and social distancing will be observed.
