Slate Belt Escapes Major Damage From IDA

Overall, the Slate Belt survived Tropical Storm Ida with only “minor” damage. New York and Philadelphia, for example, have suffered extensive damage.

Rainfall in the Slate Belt totalled 4.54 inches which is unusually high for this area.

According to scanner reports there has been some flooding, several trees reported down, and several flooded basements which is considerably less serious than tornados, major flooding, and gale force winds suffered in some surrounding areas.

Rainfall from Ida increased the total rainfall for the Slate Belt over the past 15 days to 15.83 inches. This includes rainfall from Tropical Storms, Fred, Henri and Ida.

Some rivers in the area were dangerously high at 6:30am this morning. The Delaware river level at Belvidere was 19.5 feet with flood stage listed at 22 feet.

The Delaware at Easton had climbed to 21.84 feet just a notch below flood stage which is 22 feet.

The Lehigh at Bethlehem had reached 19.44 feet which is above its 16-foot flood stage.

A Flood Warning continues for Warren County, Northampton County, Carbon County and Monroe County.

This includes the following highways...

Interstate 80 in Pennsylvania between mile markers 277 and 314.
